A Woven Thought

For Wallace Stevens

Matthew Diomede

I am at death's doorway,
peeking through broken stars.
What I see is yesterday's yarn
woven into white clouds, holding some warmth I claimed at my mother's side.
Knit me a sweater of my past, and it will shield me of night's cold star light.

THE MAILER REVIEW, VOL. 15, NO. 1, FALL 2021. Copyright © 2021. The Norman Mailer Society. Published by The Norman Mailer Society.