

A Woven Thought

For Wallace Stevens

Matthew Diomedea

I am at death's doorway, peeking through broken stars.
What I see is yesterday's yarn woven into white clouds, holding some warmth I claimed at my mother's side.
Knit me a sweater of my past, and it will shield me of night's cold star light.